How is EPA Helping (or not) with Toxics?

In 2010, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and Bayer CropScience came to an agreement that the use of an N-methyl carbamate insecticide known as Aldicarb would be discontinued in the U.S. due to the levels of toxicity realized in a risk assessment conducted by the EPA.

This was encouraging news for the environment and for the health of all living things. But it appears it was too good to last.

Inspiring Moments

This year at Textile Exchange, we are celebrating our 10 year anniversary. Among other activities, we will be using our anniversary to celebrate the pioneers and leaders in organic cotton and sustainable textiles; including farmers, manufacturers, brands, retailers, and other 'champions' working to progress more sustainable textiles.
